worked with MS Access in the past and used a connection string to get data out of it, but as time has passed, and MS Access applications have evolved, so have the connection strings. I'm going to show you today how to make those connection strings a little bit more user friendly, but most importantly, how you can make them a little bit more secure. So I'm going to use Microsoft SQL Server for this example. In this case, what I'm going to show you is that I'm going to take a database that we've been using for a long time in Access and I'm going to put it into SQL Server. I'm going to talk about some of the changes that are in the database. I'm going to take an Access database, or Access 2007 database, and put it into SQL Server. But there's a lot more that I'm going to show you because I'm going to show you how to improve this security, how to improve how you interact with the database, how to do new reporting. SQL Server or SQL Express and SQL Server 2012? I'm going to show you how to put Access 2007 into SQL Server 2012 and I'm going to talk about the differences in terms of the connection strings and the security around this process. Because the process is similar in a lot of ways to a SQL Express database in terms of the way you interact with SQL Server. So I have a sample database where I have a couple of tables and then I'm going to put Access 2007 into SQL Server, so here I have a SampleDatabase.mdb file that is the database that I'm going to use for this demonstration.

Here's a screenshot of Access looking pretty, but now let's go ahead and look at how it looks when I have it in SQL Server.

So I have this database which I created just a little while ago

Team managers can set up macro keysto collect scores automatically. The system will then automatically trigger the score to be reported to the desktop of the designated team member(s). The trigger can be scheduled as well so that scores are automatically collected and reported on a pre-determined schedule. The entire system is completely customizable. The only limitation is that this feature is available to account holders only and NOT to free users. You can assign a single user or multiple users to each macro key. Macros can be set up for individual teams or for the entire district. System

EventReporter is a very good product and all teams need it.

It's a free product but it has some limitations on who can be used for certain school districts. For instance for a school district with 8 different schools, if you wanted to use this product for the teams that you use for different schools you could not use the product for more than 3 of the schools. This is a limitation to the product but it is not enough to keep you from using it. Ever thought of not just keeping track of your team scores, but letting your entire school do the same? Well, you can do it now. Simply install EventReporter, enter a username, a password and a few other details and you can log in with your school ID to the computer on which EventReporter is installed. Once logged in, simply download your scores and event results on the computer on which you are logged in. Just one-click and you can get the scores and event results from your school. In case you are not aware of what EventReporter is, it is a program, which can be easily downloaded for your use from the website. When you log in to EventReporter, you will have the option of being logged in with your school ID, team ID, teacher ID or any other ID of your choice. Just choose the one that best suits your convenience and start collecting scores and event results from your teams and schools. The system allows you to enter your team's score sheets by giving you the option to choose one of the three available options: web based, local, or manual. The web-based option is the easiest to use because all you need to do is select the team you are interested in, login with your school ID, team ID or the individual you have your scores on, and click on the tabs and that's it. All the scores and event results of your team are
