The impact of high chlorophyll fluorescence on disease resistance, yield and insect damage in Capsicum annuum L. The effects of the chlorophyll fluorescence variable, pre-harvest high chlorophyll fluorescence (CHLF) on disease resistance, yield and insect damage in Capsicum annuum L. cv San Luis/Asunción (a Brassicaceae resistant to bacterial wilt) were evaluated under different N (nitrogen fertilization), water and P (phosphorus fertilizer) supply regimes. Water, P and the interaction between these two were the most important factors in terms of the yield and the plant dry weight. CHLF% was the most important variable in explaining the disease resistance and yield. In the greenhouse and field, CHLF% in the three-week period prior to harvest was correlated with the disease severity and dry weight of the fruit. The yield was reduced when CHLF% was 30%, and when only 1% of the plants were infected, similar damage was recorded in the asymptomatic and symptomatic fruit. Infected fruit showed greater CHLF% values than those with severe damage. These results show the importance of CHLF% in generating resistance to disease and pest in this vegetable crop.Cancer of the oral cavity: high incidence in Dalmatia.
