[i][b] Zero-day, zero-day, zero-day, zero-day, zero-day, zero-day, zero-day, zero-day! I had money in my account, of course, and the world was at my fingertips, albeit on my OWN terms. My highest scores were generally in health, not knowledge. I rarely missed a day in school. When I was in high school, my grades were a 5.9. I had failed science, math, and art, but it was mainly not worth the effort. I had a newspaper route at a very young age. I would run papers on my bicycle all morning and back home for lunch, and then do it all again. I found it very rewarding. I delivered 12,000 papers in a week and got a feeling of camaraderie. It put me in touch with my customers. They liked me, and I loved them for it. I had a country club membership for life. I had a pair of custom made Italian golf shoes, from a famous shoe manufacturer called Swift. They were made of suede, leather, and rubber, and I had to wait a month to get them. I had a slide rule. It was a great device, but it didn't fit into my pocket very well. So my brother and I made a shoulder harness, and tied a rope, and attached it to the case. It fit into my pocket just fine, and I could hold it in my hand, and slide a pencil along the edge, for extra accuracy. I had a Western Electric transistor radio. They were great! I never knew that I could get the radio to broadcast from my soul, and have it come in on my walls. I used to ride my bicycle all the way out to the mountains where I would listen to the radio. It didn't matter if I was in the bottom of a canyon, or at a quarry, or in the middle of the desert. I could hear the radio. I had my own bank account. I used to put money in it. I would write a personal check. I would have the money in the bank until I was ready to go. I was able to spend all my money, without a worry. I even had money saved for a down payment on a house. When my brother passed away, I found out that he had spent all of his money, except for a

I am trying to find out if ggraph python library can support directed graph. I try to use ggraph as described in the intro section of this page: But I found that even when there are two directed edges, ggraph cannot return both the edges. Here is a simple example: from ggraph import Graph g = Graph() g.add_node(name="a") g.add_edge("a", "b", "weight=2") print(g.max_out()) print(g.max_out()[0][0]) From the above code, I expect to get two edges. But the output is just one edge. A: Gedcom cannot represent directed edges. See section 1.1 under Ggraph does not support back edges, because they are not needed to represent a directed graph. This is explicitly stated in the gedcom specification and further in section 2.2: Note: The current version of GEDCOM does not support edge directions. If there are back edges, these are specific to the schema used (I'm looking at the gedcom-rs schema). For graph edge direction, see section 3 of this document:
