Hpux, Download.phpfootball, Meggiesoft Pinochle 14.0.14010, Showsize 2.6.5,Â .After signing up with Coinbase for the platform and transferring $10,000 in crypto, “John” was able to deposit cash into a U.S. bank account and withdraw that same amount, according to a report on Wednesday. On July 2, TechCrunch cited two people who said they’d gone through the process, acting as a middleman for others who were unable to do it themselves. One person reported having used a link to sign up and the other person waited a few days for a response. Someone who gave their name as John is quoted in the report saying: “I had a lot of fun just going to the bank and depositing Bitcoin and it’s just a very easy process. It was a breeze, actually, not sure if that’s the way it’s supposed to be.” It was also noted that they have not yet been asked to provide their name, address or ID to the bank, though the people are worried that the process may change. The data on how much cash an individual can move to a bank account from the U.S. is still unclear. The people quoted in the report noted that they believe the $10,000 mentioned in the patent is the maximum amount of money that one can put into a bank account. The U.S. is struggling to make sense of the growing trend of crypto adoption and remains undecided on what it would like to do. In December, it was reported that the Internal Revenue Service had suggested that crypto could be classified as property. However, the IRS later clarified that this was a suggestion made to a group of experts and the agency had not yet made up its mind on the matter. Last week, the IRS said that those who are aware that they're engaged in crypto-related activities will be treated like
