[PS3] Rogero Downgrade Any CFW Version To 3.55.18

Rogero Downgrade any CFW version to 3.55.18 A: You can purchase software-only for your PS3 and use that to get the downgrade! Since the downgrade to 3.55 won't void your warranty you won't need a Sony repair. A simple Google search will turn up companies selling firmware-specific software. A: the best answer(until now) for me was the guide provided by kkr73 that allows you to buy any firmware version, but i had to buy that via website and pay those high prices to it. Q: jsonGenerator: store the result of a method in a String I am currently using Java's jsonGenerator to write json into a byte stream. At this point the jsonGenerator object has its own method toString which produces a string that has escaped quotes. The method also escapes backslashes, because strings are quoted while writing. For me it is not necessary to store those escaped strings into Strings in order to print them again when reading the data. I would like to return a simple String instead of printing. The question is now how I can store the result of the method toString into a String. As an example, here is the code: public class jsonExample { public static void main(String[] args) throws IOException { jsonGenerator json = json.createGenerator(new ByteArrayOutputStream()); json.writeStartObject(); json.write("a", String.class); json.writeNumber("5"); json.write("end"); json.flush(); System.out.println(json.toString(String.class)); System.out.println(json); } } I would like to write this to a stream (byte[]) instead of printing out each object or a whole String. The information is stored in a variable called json. I am using Java's jsonGenerator here because it should be possible to send the json object to a REST Web Service using HttpClient. e79ca774b

Your PS3 will be running a custom firmware with the exact same build number as it. [PS3] Rogero Downgrade Any CFW Version To 3.55.18 had to risk at least a couple of hours. Even with the way the night progressed, only a few more hours on the cushion and I would know what it felt like to be a real couch surfer. I was going to need a lot more than a couple of hours. I could spend days in this prone position, all the while fantasizing about my next meal, my next glass of wine, my next ride. Not to mention the plethora of road kills that would be forever filled with deliciousness. That day, I decided I would need a support group if I was to push past my head down position. This is when I began to contact my fellow couchsurfers and made some connections that I made sure to never forget. In order to progress beyond my head down position, I wanted someone to watch my back. These people were not just my friends - they were the people who looked out for my backside, my back. It was unlikely that I was going to be able to go on couchsurfing trips like this for years to come, but I was confident I could couchsurf the remainder of my life. More likely than not, I would likely have a life-long buddy by my side through it all. So, I was careful to only make contact with people who I thought I could fully trust. It was not something I wanted to risk on a trip like this. And, it paid off. I know that I would never have that same trust with my friends, or some random person from a stranger site. A little after midnight, I started to fall asleep. I was trying not to, but I found my head was going down and down. At some point, I caught myself before the head down position. Slowly, I could start to move my body. With so much smoke in the air, I was scared to move because I didn't know what I was going to hit my head on. I still had no idea how I would move my body, but I found myself slowly standing up, and then moving. Still cautious, I made my way to my car, with my head in the air for the first time in days. I drove home slowly, for the first time in days, and with a sore head. I pulled into my driveway and plopped
