The Revolt: Awakening is a non-linear, first person shooter, adventure, set in an alternative 1850's post-apocalypse, where you play as a bounty hunter hunting your toughest opponent yet. 'The Revolt: Awakening' is a spiritual successor to Broken Sword: The Devil's Cartel's first game and brings together all the best elements of adventure games, well-written storylines, a magical universe and a dynamic combat system. Explore the world, meet intriguing characters, find clues, interrogate suspects, search for your stolen belongings, solve puzzles, level-up, unlock new weapons, vehicles, skills and more. You can even combine the items to create more powerful weapons and items. not prejudicial. Appellant finally contends that the district court erred by directing that the indictment be returned on the same day, and by not ordering that the indictment be unsealed or returned to the prosecutor's office for further processing. On the basis of the record, it cannot be said that the district court's desire to comply with local rules led to its decision to dismiss the indictment. Moreover, the district court did not dismiss the indictment because it lacked jurisdiction as to appellant. As to the other issue, because the indictment was not dismissed until July 27, 1985, and because appellant was not arrested until November 30, 1985, the district court correctly held that, if any of the offenses were committed on that date, the statute of limitations had not expired. See Mauer, 427 A.2d at 464. - 14 - J-S44030-16 For all the reasons set forth, we affirm appellant's judgment of sentence. Judgment of sentence affirmed. P.J.E. files a Concurring Statement. So, for example, I may have a string: ls -altr /whatever/blah/blah/blah I want to get it to return: blah blah blah I was thinking that I could use Regex to parse out the groups of words and then check to see if each word group contains" (space), in which case it would be removed. Then, because I'm using a space as a delimiter, I could add each word group back together as a whole for the output. d41b202975

What's new:

[CAPSTAN] "Creating the soundtrack to The Revolt was less of a rush and more of an exploration of the material," Capstan frontman and Composer, Bucket Garrett explains. "The songs came from a lot of different places, and the first time I got into the space of the space ship was through my friend and collaborator Alexis Thomas (Fint System, Diamonds In Disguise, Nature Academy). He was into watching a lot of sci-fi films, and working out of that, the compositions that emerged felt like their own little world. I mostly just dove in to paint to see how things played out, and the results were a bit of a surprise." The mix of video games, sci-fi and other genres contribute to the unique atmosphere, Garrett continues, "We were going for a more audio-visual record, something that would be interesting to watch while producing an escape. We actually ended up making a choice to work very closely with our friend and film student Alex Woodgrove (Beatsweat, Downstream), who wanted to play a critical role in our visual aesthetic. We spoke to him about modern Sci-fi, and we gave him free reign to work from that, and we ended up with a riddim piece that played throughout the video game sequences, and it really tied them together. "What ultimately matters is the ability to see yourself, and you in another place. So I think that was key," he continues. The opening track 'Family Map' feels like it brings us directly into the monstrous Interdimensional Transporter Sequence. Garrett tells us, "The opening transition had to feel organic to me, and I used an epic sounding keyboard sample, with a layered string melody. "I put in a lot of that "what is real?" effect, and I'm a big fan of the Jack Perry gospel samples of the '90s. People don't really use them anymore, because they are more antiquated, but they are more powerful than anything that's out now. The point is, I wanted an effect that wasn't metronomic, and I wanted something that could be felt in the sinus passages of the listener's brain." On 'Slipper's Prophecy', the synth lines were developed using samples of different strings
