Evaluation of preoperative acetyl salicylic acid and statin therapy on inflammatory biomarkers in patients undergoing elective open abdominal aortic aneurysm repair. Intraoperative bleeding associated with abdominal aortic aneurysm (AAA) repair is associated with tissue ischaemia and inflammation. We hypothesized that acetyl salicylic acid (ASA) and statins may have a role in the modulation of the systemic inflammatory response and perioperative haemostasis and lower the risk of intra- and post-operative bleeding. Patients who were scheduled to undergo elective open AAA repair were randomly assigned to receive perioperative ASA (300 mg orally twice a day) or statin treatment (atorvastatin 10 mg daily). Preoperative inflammatory biomarkers levels were investigated in all patients. Serum levels of interleukin (IL)-1 β , IL-6, IL-8, C-reactive protein (CRP), P-selectin and TNF- α were measured on the first day before AAA repair and on the day of surgery. Perioperative blood loss and transfusion requirements were also recorded. The study included 50 male patients. The median age was 72 years (range: 55-82) and all were Caucasian. There were 23 patients in the ASA group and 27 in the statin group. Serum CRP (19.5 [13.3-33.0] and 14.4 [11.5-35.0] mg/L, P=0.032) and IL-1 β (0.62 [0.52-1.15] and 0.54 [0.40-1.01] pg/mL, P=0.001) were significantly lower in the ASA group compared with the statin group, while IL-6 and P-selectin levels were similar. The median (interquartile range [IQR]) total perioperative blood loss was 700 mL (500-1250 mL) and 100 mL (50-0 mL) (P
