AutoCAD imports and exports files as Tagged Image File Format (TIFF), a powerful file format that supports all the features of DXF that AutoCAD users are accustomed to. The TIFF file format has been around for a long time and it is often referred to as a "universal file format" because the same file format can be used to interchange data files. As soon as you upload a TIFF file into AutoCAD, you can easily work with the TIFF file's tags. That means you can associate important information, such as title, comments, printer's marks, author, and scale, with the drawing. You can also work with AutoCAD's color tagging. When you add color to a drawing, you can set the color tag to be one of the many predefined color tags. You can also manually assign your own color tag to the drawing. When you export a drawing from AutoCAD, you can specify how the export should handle the tags, enabling you to work with the exported TIFF file's tags just as if you had imported the drawing directly from the file. AutoCAD makes it easy to maintain drawings in a central repository. With AutoCAD as a true repository, you can take full advantage of a centralized location to share, collaborate, and communicate with your team. By storing the various files of your project in one location, you can easily access them from any location and time you want. You can share the files to your teammates as soon as you finish a project, or save them for later. You can even import shared files into the drawing to make them available to others. You can also download and share files from a repository from other software. The 2019 updates to the DXF and PostScript file formats have also improved import and export for TIFF files. Note: Most of these features have been available in AutoCAD for several years. They are new in version 2023. Integrated Graphics Engine: Based on the built-in Geometry Engine technology, AutoCAD 2019 improved the rendering performance by combining the graphics data structures and the graphics rendering engine in the graphics processor. New rendering and shading algorithms that use these data structures are faster than before. Also, GPU resources can be managed efficiently. This enables better performance with smaller drawing files and when working with multiple projects. Autodes
