Pelvic floor muscle training has rapidly gained more and more popularity as conservative and conservative surgery, but the evidence of its effectiveness is very limited. It is hard to compare the efficacy of different training techniques (hands-on vs hands-free, number of trainers/individual/time, type of contraction/endurance) because no uniform protocol for clinical studies exists. Additionally, the formulation of correct programs depends on a lot of elements that vary between trainers. After reviewing the published literature, we recommend a hands-on training program using 30-40 cm H2O of pressure as a best practice. We also recommend to select a physiotherapist that is trained and experienced in the technique, the surrounding health care system and has a scientific background.Avian influenza virus H5N1 Infection: Human Experience and Risk Assessment. In October 2004, the first confirmed human case of infection with avian influenza virus (AIV) H5N1 was reported in Hong Kong. The infection was a mild influenza illness and no further cases have since been detected. This experience has led to a number of factors affecting risk assessment, including knowledge about the transmissibility of the virus among humans, human immunity to the virus, and the length of the susceptible human life span. Lessons learned from the experience of this epidemic will serve as reference for future pandemic preparedness. Additionally, the pandemic potential of
