"unlock" the lost area of a classic game that keeps on growing with the different stages of the game.The gameplay is still fully playable if you leave the cube set as the topmost object in the world. The cube then must rotate in order to move the object on the ground and rotate again to move the cube. The cursor becomes a nail to the side of the cube. Try it to see the kind of gameplay you can achieve this way. The mechanics of its evolution are as follows: * the object is smaller and larger every time you eat or drink. * the number of fissures also grows with the larger object. * everything is unlocked if you can find enough nuggets. * you can only eat each object twice. * the cylinder spins slowly around the room. * the cylinder rotates at different speeds. * the little stick turns into a hammer and a nail. * the objects can be joined. The current version has 8 objects. We have taken inspiration from the original game as well as video games. * Directly inspired by Goland. * Similar to The Oeroe for his similarity with the original game. * The controls are very similar to Newspaper in which you control the cursor with your controller by making the screen shake. If you would like to contribute, send me a message here on steam or here on the forum and I will send you the de-bug data. - thanks to all the people that took part in the test phase I have redrawn the game-play using a simple 2d tile engine, and it seems to work perfectly fine. If you want to follow what I'm doing, you can go here to see the source code for Herding Dog: -Now I will also upload a very detailed video showing the core of the gameplay. -For the time being I have added in an extra scenario: -Winter time mode-4Possum is the boss now, and it's very different, so you'll need to use different tactics to beat him. -It's also still playable with the top cube as the object. -You will still need 10 objects in order to reach an end game. -If you can get 10 objects in the game, you will still reach the end-game. In the demo you have 4 levels

What's new in Undergrowth: VR Maze:

Ready for SEA Games in Chengdu, China February 8, 2017 ZEN and The Abyss team up to bring Undergrowth, an award-winning VR experience originally developed by The Chinese Room, out of China and into the SEA Games. SEA Games 2017, the biennial sporting event for Southeast Asian nations, is coming up next month in Chengdu, China. One of the main attractions for the sporting event is Undergrowth VR, a maze made up of random paths and chambers that you're free to explore. VRFocus spoke to developers ZEN Studios and The Chinese Room to discuss the origins of Undergrowth, the sudden rise in VR support for this game and the team's hopes for the future. VRFocus: Can you briefly outline what Undergrowth is and why it will be in Chengdu next month? Undergrowth will be a maze you can explore in virtual reality. Maybe when you die there will be a next time to explore the same virtual world. It's you navigating the same area. VRFocus: I was told the original release was on Linux, but then was ported to Steam and was a big hit. What made you decide to bring it to the PlayStation VR? Jason: It's VR! We've been doing PlayStation VR since, I'd say, December 2015. We thought it made sense from a brand perception standpoint, given that Undergrowth has been a game that was being developed for Linux [for PS4, Wii U, etc.]. We don't want to segment those gamers who want the PS4 version of Undergrowth, or want to look at these two games as competing. We've got two ways to go about this. One is, basically, we've got these PS4/Wii U/PS Move plugins out there to do locomotion... we did the Mac and Linux versions and it was awesome, because when you go on the PS4, if you have a PS Move, it's really easy to just take that controller and plug it in, and then you can hit the teleport button as well. That's what you're going to see. The PC version of the game runs super well on PC, thank goodness. We've got input-based physics, input is very powerful, you can basically throw yourself around quite a bit. You can do such cool things.
