ok, this requires windows, but jaeclub does exactly this, the tools are relatively easy to work with but well worth checking out, they just need to add more input methods, i believe it would be a 'one stop shop' for this kind of thing, this a little hidden gem and i am not sure when it came out, but it is available from the developer, it handles a lot of the work for you when dealing with conversion to more languages, you can use the menu system to change settings, and the app takes the audio track from your source, and the subtitles or captions on that track and then creates as many transcript files as you need in a specific language, this can then be added to a project and sent over to the transfer site, i used this on a few shows that i did which weren't english translations of their japanese original, if you don't know chinese, it may not be helpful to you, but, if you are interested in recording japanese anime shows, you should check it out, it was only available for a couple months but i used it to help get a version of the show up, you can pay $29 to get unlimited sources and unlimited languages, but i have never done it, these guys have done most of the legwork, as mentioned above, i use the program when i have to redo one of my sixteen shots, damned long and blazing hot torrent shows, while i did upload to fb as a way of testing, the platform has a lot of problems, re-uploading to youtube makes it much more user-friendly, though i am still limited by the time, i recommend looking at both platforms, though for now, facebook is your best bet for uploading, see how the different things compare, while the two apps are free, as is the creator's other app, (deep boop), they will not do your research for you.
