Hi, I've just upgraded to LR6. The storage database(s) have now grown beyond my HDD space. I've been unable to locate all the photos that I uploaded into Lightroom and I'm trying to find out the best method to remove any that might wind up on my laptop or media. I keep deleting the LR6 LR6's database files and when I restart Lightroom the database files re-size to be much smaller and the photos aren't being moved and added to my laptop. Lightroom won't allow me to delete the LR6 database files and I can't find the database in the program files unzippers for my Windows 10. What Can I do to remove any photos in Lightroom that might be on my Windows laptop? You can download and install Lightroom on your Android device using Lightroom for Android. There, you can download your contacts and other data and synch the data to your Android device. We currently have some bugs that prevent data from syncing on initial install. You can work without syncing as long as you don't delete or move data. The server will sync again once you have more data in your library.

I'm so glad Adobe ported Lightroom to Windows 10
I use it everyday at work!
I do have a question though. Can you export the photos in seperate directories without a hierarchy to the Lightroom library? Set up in Manage Libraries, you can scroll through the various library containers. These are categorized by the current project: Work, Shots, Galleries, and Plug-Ins. Once in a container, you can preview and delete its content. The content can always be restored, if needed. Sets are a new feature for VR. Once set up, you can quickly access the images and projects in that set. In Manage Libraries, you can also search in detail by keyword and the project image.
