La Vigne Book Review: Night of the Animals by Mirka J. La Vigne Night of the Animals, by Mirka J. La Vigne, is a novel about a young woman who is forced to begin a battle she never wanted to fight. Maria is a survivor who was born in the war-torn United States. She has both moral and physical scars, which prevent her from going back home to her country. Instead, she keeps to herself and her memories to make ends meet. One night Maria stumbles upon a neighborhood that has been transformed into a refugee camp for all of the migrants that have been displaced to the New World. The camp is inhabited by many of the people who have come to the United States seeking asylum, and Maria is trapped and desperate. During the winter, the cold is brutal and life is hard for Maria and the camp inhabitants. Maria is saved from the homeless encampment when she is taken in by a man named Nathaniel, an apparently old man who insists that she is his granddaughter. Nathaniel has his own secrets, and he has a very good reason for not being forthcoming about them. Maria discovers that she is the daughter of the man who saved her and she was given a handsome reward, but his family is much more wealthy than Maria ever imagined. Nathaniel is a former psychiatrist and is now trying to help those he has come to care about, and Maria realizes that she may be in danger when she meets the other residents of his clinic, and what they may be plotting against. Night of the Animals is a fascinating read about what it means to be a refugee. La Vigne shows Maria's struggle to accept the new life she is given by Nathaniel, and she learns
