Videoconferencing refers to technology that allows two or more participants to interact with each other using a combination of audio, video, and graphics for a real time two-way video and/or audio communication. A schematic diagram of a typical videoconference system is shown in FIG. 1. The videoconferencing system includes a videoconference apparatus 10 coupled to a network 18. A first user 12 and a second user 14 are each coupled to the videoconference apparatus 10 via a telephone 20 or other communication device. The telephone 20 converts audio from the first user 12 into a digitally encoded and compressed audio signal that is transmitted to the videoconference apparatus 10. The videoconference apparatus 10 decodes the signal and converts it into an analog audio signal. The analog audio signal is converted into audio data by an audio encoder within the videoconference apparatus 10. The audio data is transmitted to the videoconference apparatus 10 and the audio data is mixed with video data and stored within a video memory within the videoconference apparatus 10. The stored video and audio data is periodically outputted to a display device 22 which converts the video and audio data into digital video and audio signals. The video and audio signals are outputted to a speaker 24 and earphone 26. A microphone 24 may be used to capture audio from the second user 14. The voice of the second user 14 is converted into an analog signal by a voice encoder within the videoconference
