For many of us, this is just a welcome change due to the shift of focus away from the concept of filters and adjustments to the focus on the actual picture. In the catalog view, you will see 15 tiles instead of five, showing you the same changes displayed in five different ways. I personally found this second view very useful, as it provides a reference for what the final image should look like. The preview tile just makes it even easier. Regarding Lightroom's slower performance, Adobe could certainly do more to optimize it. I don't know if I'm the only one who feels that the Preview Tasks dialog is getting larger by the day. As if Lightroom were getting gradually heavier by the minute. It should go without saying that any app that automatically seeks to optimize resources must also prioritize optimizing its performance. However, this has certainly not happened with Lightroom, which I believe could really benefit from newer technologies. If you have a lot of images in your Lightroom
